CAUDLE PARTIES IN NEW YORK-MISS SEDGWICK'S READINGS.

A correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes thus of a rather "peculiar institution" of New York society: There is an institution here of unrecorded fame; it always thrives in Lent as a substitute for other gaieties; its origin is believed it as Dutch. It is Caudle; not that species and Low's Honey do. For sale by

J. WILLIAM BOWLING, immortalized by Douglass Jerrold, but one quite as spicy and more palatable-made of ancient brandy, wine, sugar, oatmeal, raisins, nutmeg, cinnamon and all sorts of saccharine and stimulating condiments-made in large quantities, ladled out into tea-cups and complacently imbibed between the hours of Stone State Saponifer, just received and for sale one and four, P. M., ostentatiously in honor by of the advent of an "innocent," who between the sips is passed round, and of course declared the finest child ever seen. This simultaneous gratification of philoprogenitiveness and convivial instinct always brings carnation to the cheek of the matron and volubility to her tongue; babydom, though the occasion, is not the inspiration; gallons of caudle disappear; and dowagers momentarily renew their youth in drinking the health of "that blessed baby."

The Albany Statesman furnishes the following small talk about New York society, for the information of the rural districts:

"Now that Lent has caused a temporary cessation in the general festivities of the socalled fashionable world-especially of the Episcopal and Catholic Churches-readings at private houses are coming in vogue, at which from fitty to a hundred of Eve's fair daughters assemble to listen to the interpretations of the best specimens of "pure old English undefiled."

"Miss Sedgwick, of hereditary intellectual fame, following in the wake of Mrs. Kemble Butler, whose career here was a success financially as well as oratorically-has given quite a number of these readings. With most attractive presence, a well-modulated and sympathetic voice, and thorough cultivation, this lady has inspired great admirationreading days of her own selection having been arranged at the houses of Mrs. President King of Columbia College, Mrs. George Bancroft, Mrs. Parish, and other leaders of the 'upper ten." "The scene at one of these readings is represented as quite striking-with the number of private carriages, the ladies dressed in full visiting costume, and the absence of the male element-so pleasant occasionally, as one of the fair spectators nairely remarked .--The 'occasionally' was slightly emphasized, of course; but certainly this new style of entertainment is an improvement upon the balls and parties, which this winter, it is true, have been rather less frequent than usual.—

I am not the "Jenkins," and, therefore, cannot be expected to name the presence and describe the tout ensemble of the angelic participants in these "readings" which have deservedly become an institution here."

EQUESTRIAN QUADRILLES IN BERLIN. The Berlin correspondent of the London Times gives the following interesting description of some equestrian quadrilles performed in the Prussian capital, in honor of the arrival of the Princess Royal of England:

The riding-house was fitted up, according to all accounts, with great taste and lavish expenditure of banners, trophies of arms and accoutrements, garlands, wreaths, festoons of flowers, &c., the intention being to make it resemble a tilting-ground in the close vicinity of a baronial hall.

The gallery erected for the Prince and Princess and the other numerous members

| UBIN'S GENUINE EXTRACTS, AND Oregon and California, in 1848, by J. Quinn BAZIN'S SOAP, just received and for sale Thornton, 2 vols. 12mo., $1. he royal family was richly draped, as it is described to me, in white, gold and crimson, and opposite to it and the nobility, at the other end of the riding-house, was another for the officers not taking part in the quadrille and the musicians of the different regiments. Your readers can fancy themselves that the shrill and stirring music of three cavalry regiments, numbers of banners and flags, quantities of evergreens and flowers, with a plentiful supply of light from chandeliers, lustres and lamps, must have produced an exciting scene, to which must be added the presence of royalty, and the charm of "England's eldest daughter." Among the grazing land, some fifty or sixty acres being botvery few civilians and ladies invited to be present as guests were Lord and Lady Bloom-

Sixteen officers of the Garde du Corps opened the ball in full uniform, with silver cuirass and helmet (the latter bearing the spread eagle perched on it,) and high jackboots; after making the tour of the arena once at a walking pace and then at a gallop, they performed the usual quadrille with precision and correctness, sayeth my informant, the figare of the moulinet being peculiarly successful. Then followed the Lancers' set of quadrilles, ridden for the first time perhaps since it received that name, by Lancers, i. e., by officers of that regiment; such of them as occupied the posts usually assigned to ladies in these quadrilles being distinguished by bows of ribands in the English colors bound on the arms, the gentlemen officers wearing Prussian

The third quadrille was executed by the officers of the Hussars of the Guard. Here the red uniform braided with gold, the Hungarian boots and close-fitting pantaloons, the red attilas hanging from the shoulder, the jaunty calpace, and the plumes of heron feathers waving with the rapid motion, must have been really a brilliant sight. The arrangement of having every couple of dancing horses composed of a dark and of a lighter partner added to the effect."
